Deb's Country Corner

Holla Country Folks! It's late Sunday afternoon, and I just came from Sunday dinner at Mom's. I want sure what I was going to write about this week, but today's Sunday dinner brought back some memories of Sunday dinners in my family. I don't know how things are in your family, but in mine, Sunday is still reserved for family days. Occasionally the fish market or fish meeting, or special trip, interrupts our schedule, but we always come back to Sunday as Grandma's rule of Sunday chef, but not too many years ago it was my mother's mother who had the rule.

Sunday dinner at "Grammy's" was a religious event. Grandma had nine children, and most of them had families of their own. So when we all got together, it was a real event. Grandma's rule was to eat, and then to talk. And of course, for dessert, Grandma usually baked eight or nine pies. Like I said, we were a big family in most ways that you can imagine.

After the meal, we kids got to go outside and play. The adults took shifts again, this time at doing the dishes. It was the most informative and educational time of the week. Family nature was discussed, questions about child care were asked, and health problems were compared. We talked more dinner and world problems than the United Nations ever did. Maybe they should serve more fried chicken and mashed potatoes at the UN. It couldn't hurt, could it?

One of Grammy's books best was the recipe for this week's dinner!

1/4 cup coconut

The drowning machine

Last May's sunbath had its life when it came to a halt. The sunbath was a low-level dam. The dam was clearly marked by "Danger Dam Ahead" signs. The dam had a concrete structure in that part of the river. Water conditions were high with a well current and the water temperature was 51 degrees.

Could this sunbath have been a drowning machine? It is interesting to note that all the things on a river that are dangerous to humans, it is the low-head dam which is made for humans, by humans, that is the most dangerous to them.

Low-head dams are generally small dams which were built for various purposes other than water supply reservoirs. The hazards exist not only from going over the dam, but also below the dam, in the backwash where the power of the water is frequently overboarded.

Anything (on or near) caught in the backwash (hydraulic) is trapped and held in place. It is not unusual for people and livestock to be caught in the backwash. Weekly HEALTH TIP

LAUGH MEDICINE

A chuckle heart is a good medicine, but a dramatic good laugh is a great medicine. Laughter relieves stress, increases respiratory activity, eases muscle tension and heart rate. It may stimulate the brain to produce endorphins (natural pain killers) - it can reduce depression and may increase your life span. A good laugh is free - and you don't need a prescription.
